One commonly used phrase from this time is "to paint the lily." This phrase is derived from a Shakespearean expression and means adding unnecessary embellishments to something already beautiful. It reflects the flamboyant and extravagant nature of the Restoration period.

Another intriguing phrase that originated during this time is "to eat the leek." It refers to publicly admitting a mistake or yielding to someone, further emphasizing the playful and sometimes humorous character of the era.

Join us as we uncover more unique Restoration Georgian phrases and delve into the vibrant language that adorned the courts and streets of old England.

The Regency Period: A Time of Elegance and Romance

The Regency period, spanning from 1811 to 1820, was marked by the reign of King George IV. This era saw a revival of classical architecture, an appreciation for the arts, and the birth of romantic literature.

One prominent phrase from this time is "cup-and-saucer flirtations." This term refers to flirtatious exchanges between young couples during tea parties, using the positioning of their cups and saucers to communicate their intentions without uttering a word. The Regency period valued subtlety, elegance, and the art of intricate communication.

Another captivating phrase, "You are a devil at cards," showcases both the love for card games and the admiration for someone's exceptional skills. This phrase exemplifies the polite and sophisticated nature of the Regency period.
