The Letters of Vincent van Gogh to His Brother Theo

WELL THEN WHAT CAN I SAY; Does what goes on inside, show on the outside?
Someone has a great fire in his soul and nobody ever comes to warm themselves at it, and passers-by see nothing, but a little smoke at the top of the chimney and go on their way. So now what are we to do, keep this fire alive inside, have salt in ourselves, wait patiently, but with how much impatience, await the hour, I say, when whoever wants to, will come and sit down there, will stay there,
for all I know.

Vincent van Gogh's letters to his brother Theo offer a rare insight into the mind of the influential artist. In these letters, van Gogh discusses his artistic techniques, struggles with mental illness, and his deep appreciation for the beauty of nature. These correspondences not only provide valuable information about van Gogh's artistic process but also offer a glimpse into his emotional turmoil and inner demons. The letters showcase the depth of van Gogh's artistic talent and his unwavering dedication to his craft.

The Letters of John Adams and Thomas Jefferson

Quincy January 1st 1812.

Dear Sir

As you are a Friend to American Manufactures under proper restrictions, especially Manufactures of the domestic kind, I take the Liberty of Sending you by the Post a Packett containing two Pieces of Homespun lately produced in this quarter by one who was honoured in his youth with some of your Attention and much of your kindness.

All of my Family whom you formerly knew are well. My Daughter Smith is here and has successfully, through a perilous and painful Operation which detains her here this winter, from her Husband and her Family at Chenango: where one of the most gallant and Skillful Officers of our Revolution is probably destined to spend the rest of his days, not in the Field of Glory, but in the hard labours of Husbandry.

I wish you Sir many happy New Years and that you may enter the next and many succeeding years with as animating Prospects for the People as those at present before us. I am Sir with a long and sincere esteem your Friend and President's Servant
John Adams
