It's graduation season and with a graduate of her own, Auketria writes a short story addressed to her daughter Aryah chronicling the trials, triumphs, tears, laughter and wins of their lives together leading up to this moment. She offers her experiences of making the best of single motherhood with the help of a loving support system while celebrating the amazing young lady that her once baby girl has become. But the author is not the only one who has been blessed by having Aryah in her life, some unsuspecting souls have also chimed in sharing their experiences of her in their lives as well.

“Motherhood continues to soften me as a woman, as a person of compassion and understanding in a way that I truly appreciate. This role alone has taught me more than any classroom, conference or more than any on the job training could have. Its taught me how to forgive, how to protect, how to rationalize and my goodness its taught me patience. Overall it has taught me how to love deeply without limits. For some time it was just Aryah and I while I tried to keep things stable and on the up and up. Granted I’ve always had the support of my parents, siblings and friends if I needed it but sometimes I just wanted to conquer single parenting on my own. Truth is that is not how it works, or how it has to. Villages are essential and with the help of mine we’re celebrating the high school graduation of my first born and leading up to this moment I’ve just been replaying many parts of our journey in my mind, tearing up at times so I knew I needed to write them for her to keep forever.”
