These letters are from the dad who wrote these words to his children after realizing how much time had passed and how the busyness of life had robbed him of opportunities to be there for them. Their adult lives are a reflection of what he did right and what he did not do right.

We all make mistakes. This is true, but our children need to be taught by our own example – we own up to those faults, even when it's really embarrassing for us.

The lesson this dad learned was that your children will respect you more for TAKING TOTAL RESPONSIBILITY for all that's happened, not wasting your breath trying to blame their mom like Adam did Eve.
