When my husband's dementia was diagnosed, I started to keep a journal of my ever changing relationship with my husband of forty years. As his dementia took its toll on my husband's body and brain, my thoughts and emotions were erratic, and keeping a journal helped me to marshal my emotional experiences. The process was at times very difficult, and there was a sense of betrayal also that was unexpected. His journey was only four and a half years post-diagnosis. The writing of this journal has been a cathartic experience, and I am grateful to all the family members who have encouraged me on this route.
