

LBJ and the Conspiracy to Kill Kennedy: Unveiling the Hidden Truth

The assassination of President John F. Kennedy on November 22, 1963, has sparked numerous conspiracy theories over the years. While the official account attributes the murder to a lone gunman, Lee Harvey Oswald, many believe that there was a more elaborate plot behind the president's death.

In this article, we delve into the controversial theory that Lyndon B. Johnson, the Vice President at the time, played a crucial role in orchestrating Kennedy's assassination. Join us as we explore the evidence, motives, and potential involvement of LBJ in this long-standing conspiracy.

The Motive: LBJ's Ambitions

Lyndon B. Johnson had long coveted the presidency and was eager to ascend to the highest office in the land. As Vice President, his power was limited, and he felt overshadowed by the charismatic and popular President Kennedy.

Conspiracy theorists argue that Johnson saw the presidency as his only chance to fulfill his political aspirations. They claim that LBJ was involved in a web of corruption and that his links to wealthy individuals, businesses, and organized crime made him a prime candidate for conspiring against Kennedy.

The Repeated Hints: Johnson's Ominous Premonitions

Curiously, there are reports suggesting that Lyndon B. Johnson made several unsettling statements prior to Kennedy's assassination that raised suspicions. According to some witnesses, he insinuated that Kennedy wouldn't last through his first term.

One alleged quote attributed to LBJ is particularly chilling: "After the liberal administration, they will have a conservative administration two times – one man serving two terms." Many imply from this statement that Johnson was predicting Kennedy's assassination and planning to secure his own presidency.

The Secret Phone Call: LBJ's Suspicious Conversations

Furthermore, evidence has surfaced regarding a secret phone call allegedly made by Johnson to Sam Rayburn, his close associate and Speaker of the House, just hours before Kennedy's assassination. Although the content of the conversation remains unknown, its timing raises eyebrows.

Conspiracy theorists speculate that Johnson may have used this call to ensure Rayburn's support in the aftermath of the tragedy. Was he discussing plans to take control of the government, exploit the emotional climate, and secure his own position as the successor to President Kennedy?

The Warren Commission: A Cover-Up?

After the assassination, the Warren Commission was established to investigate the events surrounding Kennedy's death. While officially affirming Oswald as the lone shooter, the Commission's credibility has been challenged by those skeptical of the official narrative.

Doubters argue that the Commission's findings were too quick and too convenient, pointing out several inconsistencies and overlooked witnesses. They believe that LBJ may have exerted influence over the investigation to ensure that the true extent of his involvement in the conspiracy was concealed.

Evidence and Witnesses: Connecting LBJ to the Conspiracy

Several controversial pieces of evidence connect Lyndon B. Johnson to the assassination plot. The most significant one is the testimony of Madeleine Duncan Brown, a woman who claimed to have been LBJ's mistress for 21 years.

Brown alleged that Johnson informed her about the planned assassination weeks before it took place. She claimed to have been present at a political gathering in Dallas on the evening before Kennedy's murder, where LBJ declared that "those SOB's will never embarrass me again" when referring to JFK and his brother Robert Kennedy.

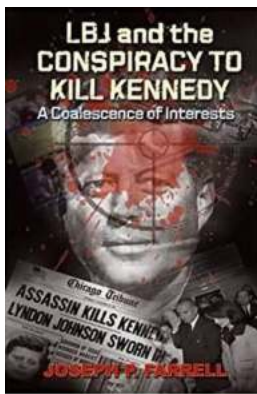

While many dismiss Brown's claims, citing her lack of corroborative evidence, others believe she provides crucial insight into LBJ's potential motivations and intentions.
