Before we delve into the current state of marijuana law, it's important to understand its historical context. Marijuana has been used for thousands of years for various purposes, including medicinal and recreational use. However, it wasn't until the early 20th century that the United States began implementing restrictions on its possession and distribution.

In 1937, the Marijuana Tax Act was passed, effectively prohibiting the use and sale of marijuana. This was followed by the Controlled Substances Act in 1970, which classified marijuana as a Schedule I drug alongside substances like heroin and LSD. These laws set the stage for the strict regulation and criminalization of cannabis at the federal level.
