The Partners in Crime TV series gave the BBC's Sunday night schedule a much-needed slap in the chops. If you want a frothy populist drama you go to history's bestselling novelist Agatha Christie and her lesser-known detective duo Tommy and Tuppence Beresford were resurrected for this breezy entertaining romp. Battling often baffling Soviet plots against the Crown the Beresfords tackle their missions with all the enthusiasm and blunders you'd expect from the overreaching amateur. Showcasing Christie's meticulous plotting, rug pulling and devilish twists the adaptation was the first of two the BBC made for 2015, the 125th anniversary of her birth.
