

Sunset Poems Balu Adams - Captivation in Verse

A colour changing spectacle
The show begins at five
Best seats are all free
You can only look up
When it turns beautiful
Like the half sucked orange candy
That we held with sticky fingers
And said
See, just like the sun
Orange candy turns to raspberry
A blanket of haze awaiting
Slowly engulfing
The source of all life
And then just a faint sliver
Grey over pink
Blink
It's still there
Blink
Is it?
Just grey.

SUNSET POEMS collects the stories of the inhabitants of Kibigori town in Kisumu, Western Kenya. It collects the minute details of everyday life and one time events affecting the inhabitants of the railway station town through the eyes of time. This is the authors introspection of the dwindling fortunes of a once vibrant town, of the significant upheavals through time, the coming of religion, urbanization and eventually the lulling calming effect of a sundowner by the shores of the expansive Lake Victoria. These are stories collected through poetry and the nostalgia of times passing through this small part of Africa.
