Every parent wants to and should have deeper and more meaningful discussions with their preteens, middle graders and teenagers. How can this happen?

This companion guide to The LoGlas Theater, the 3rd Book in The Growing Up Aimi QnA Series - 126 MORE Discussions That Every Parent Should Have with Their Middle Graders and Teenagers is meant to facilitate unforced conversations between parents and their children - preteen and teenagers.

This companion guide works best when accompanied with the Middle Grade adventure novel - The LoGlas Theater. But it can also work as a stand alone volume of its own.

However, when a parent read together - not necessarily sitting next to one another - but on the same schedule, the story of The LoGlas Theater becomes a common interest between the parent, grandparent and child/ren.

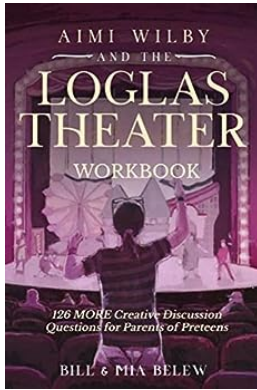

While talking about the book, the plot, the twists and turns, the discussion questions fit very naturally into the conversation - perhaps at meal time or while driving too and from school or some extra curricular event.

What parent doesn't want to know if their child/ren are feeling unloved, teased by their friends or have themselves become a bully?

This book is a list of questions parents would love to ask and get answers from with their child/ren. Reader beware - your children will want to know you answers, too.

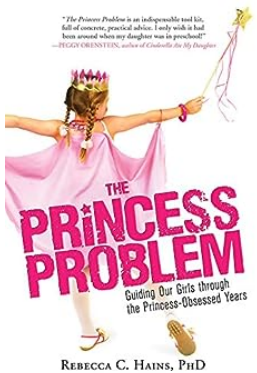

What better way to get your children to talk and listen than to show them by openly sharing and pausing long enough to really listen to them?

Enjoy a better relationship with your children after spending time in this book and its companion volume - The LoGlas Theater - also available here on Amazon.
