The Allure of Running Hand

Running Hand, or Xingshu, is known for its graceful and swift strokes that flow effortlessly across the paper. This style is characterized by its cursive nature, allowing for more fluid movement and creativity compared to other styles.

Running Hand finds its roots in the esteemed calligrapher Wang Xizhi of the Eastern Jin Dynasty. It was during this time that Running Hand began to develop a more individualistic nature, allowing artists to inject their own personal style into their brushwork.

Running Hand is often described as being akin to a dancer gracefully moving across the stage. It possesses an unmatched elegance combined with an air of spontaneity, breathing life into each character.
