The final book of the best-selling Niederbipp Trilogy. Remember, Discover, Become

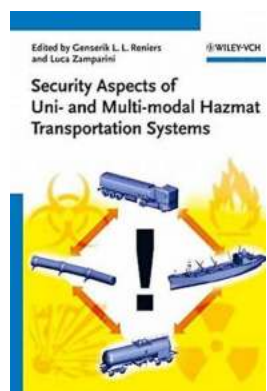

There are two questions that I am most often asked by people who have read my books. “Does Niederbipp really exist, and if it does, how do I get there?”

One woman came up to me at a book signing, and after telling me how much she’d enjoyed my first two books, declared that she absolutely had to move to Niederbipp. Her neighbors and community were a bore to her. The people were ignorant, self-righteous and mean. But she was convinced that if she could live in Niederbipp, eat Sam’s bread, drink Isaac’s tea, and walked down streets filled with happy people, she would be happy.

“Can you tell me where it is?” she persisted. “I’ve looked on every map and atlas and spent a lot of time searching for it on the internet. Please, you’ve got to tell me where it is?”

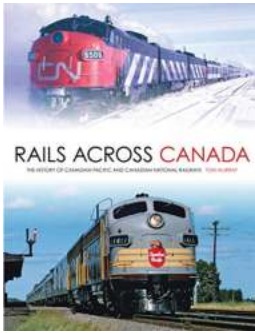

I looked at this woman and sadly told her that she would never find it.

Does Niederbipp really exist? Yes, it does! But unless you carry the lessons of Niederbipp in your heart, you will never find it. If, however, you take these things to heart—if you will live your life unselfishly—if you will face life’s decisions with love instead of fear—if you will learn to know and love your neighbors—if you will learn to forget yourself, then Niederbipp will never be far away and these books will give you the road map you need to get there.
