

The Practice of Value: The Berkeley Tanner Lectures

Value is a concept that permeates every aspect of human existence. Whether it is in our personal lives, relationships, or society as a whole, the notion of value influences the choices we make and the actions we take. Understanding how value is perceived, defined, and practiced is crucial for individuals and societies seeking to lead fulfilling and purposeful lives.

The Berkeley Tanner Lectures, established in 1978, provide a platform for leading thinkers to discuss and explore fundamental questions related to human values. These annual lectures, held at the University of California, Berkeley, feature renowned philosophers, scholars, and experts from various disciplines who offer unique perspectives on the practice of value.

Each year, the Berkeley Tanner Lectures address a different theme, inviting an interdisciplinary approach to examining the complexities and nuances of human values. The lectures are open to the public and attract both academics and individuals interested in delving into the nature of value.

The Practice of Value explores the nature of value and its relation to the social and historical conditions under which human agents live. At the core of the book are the Tanner Lectures delivered at Berkeley in 2001 by Joseph Raz, who has been one of the leading figures in moral and legal philosophy since the 1970's. Raz argues that values depend importantly on social practices, but that we can make sense of this dependence without falling back on cultural relativism. In response, three eminent philosophers, Christine Korsgaard, Robert Pippin, and Bernard Williams, offer their own distinctive reflections on the connections between value and practice. The book begins with an by Jay Wallace, setting the scene for what follows, and ends with a response from Raz to his commentators.

The result is a fascinating debate, accessible to readers throughout and beyond philosophy, about the relations between human values and human life.
