A Change of Heart

Witnessing the inhumane treatment of Jews in the Krakow ghetto and the nearby Auschwitz concentration camp, Schindler's conscience was awakened. Risking his reputation and personal safety, he embarked on a mission to protect his Jewish workers from certain death at the hands of the Nazis.

Through cunning negotiation, bribes, and manipulation, Schindler managed to secure the safety of over a thousand Jewish men and women by insisting that they were indispensable for his factory's operations. He convinced the Nazis that his factory's productivity relied heavily on these skilled workers, cleverly exploiting their obsession with industrial output. In reality, Schindler knew he was saving lives.
