He proposed that by developing self-knowledge, individuals could awaken their spiritual potential and contribute positively to society.

An essential element of Steiner's teachings encompassed the importance of education. He believed that education should revolve around the individual's spiritual development, acknowledging that the mind, soul, and body are interconnected. The Waldorf education system, based on Steiner's educational principles, is still practiced worldwide. Its emphasis on creativity, imagination, and spiritual growth revolutionized conventional educational models.
