This book points to the road forward from the present crippled and crippling structures of economics and education. It reaches way beyond Mao Zedung's little red efforts and present big blue muddlings in finance. It calls for, and is to lead to, a global collaboration of care that is millennia away. The need for that care screams to us from the present distresses of tyranny and terrorism, of the failed systems of politics and religions. The battered start of the twenty first century can lead us, from its horrors and stupidities, to those broad new international beginnings. Yet the new beginnings are deeply personal, a matter of discovering your own lonely desires and rescuing them, locally and globally, in a fresh hopefilled togetherness.
