How to Get Away with Murder saw Annelise Keating take up the mantle of the great black female lead. Like Cleopatra Jones, Lady Cocoa and Foxy Brown before her, Professor Keating gives no eff. A fearless defender of the guilty rich, she tutors a new generation of legal minds in the lowdown-and-dirty dark arts of legal streetfighting. Ruthless, cunning and almost certainly mentally ill, Annelise has freed more killers than the Maze Prison Escape and saves corporate criminals billions of dollars annually. So when a body drops on campus you just know that she's all over that action.

Her personal life's a riot too. No man is tougher, no bitch is badder and with the kind of screw-you-lady approach to female friendship designed to offend, appal and antagonise she's no stranger to isolation. So exactly who knows Annelise Keating?

TV critic James Donaghy, that's who. Your personal guide through all 15 episodes of season one, he dissects Professor Keating with the mind of a psychiatrist, the guts of a burglar and the heart of an axe murderer. ABC's smash hit gets the sneaky side-eye you know it deserves.
